Integrating your Study Abroad Experience into your Resume, Cover Letter & Interview

The study abroad experience enhances a vast amount of skills for students, such as intercultural competence, global awareness, analytical ability, self-reliance, adaptability, and communication enrichment. These skills are fundamental for a successful career, especially in our expanding global society. However, the knowledge and skills that you gained through your study abroad experience may not be obvious to an employer or graduate school admissions board. This means it is vital to express them through your resume, cover letter and responses to interview questions. The Isabella Cannon Centre for International Studies has a separate handout to help students with this. Feel free to request a copy.*
