

Podcast 3 Transcript: Exam Cram in Belk Library

Hi, this is Teresa LePors. It may be looking like the holidays but first comes the season of EXAMS!

Belk Library is always an active place, especially during the exam period. It is good to remember that the first floor will be chaotic. The second floor is designated for quiet study which means low talking, and the third floor is designated for silent study. We have soft ear plugs available for free at the information desk; they can be a great help to zone out all the noise!

Study rooms are available on all floors. They are all first come, first serve. These rooms can accommodate from 4-6 people and they all have whiteboards.

For group projects, there is a computer with a large monitor on the first floor of the library.

When the building is packed there is always floor space, and I mean literally, floor space. Since the building is wireless any place can be a study space!

The library will have extended hours beginning before the exam period. Check our website or the front doors for the library hours. Once exams begin we will not close. So you can study on all three floors all day and all night. Whatever it takes!

As always, food and drink are allowed in the library. In fact, the library will be providing free coffee and cider during the late evenings during the exam period. Listen for the announcement and take a moment for a study break.

Best wishes on your exams from Belk Library, and Happy Holidays!
