General Stanley McChrystal calls for large-scale civilian national service to engage more Americans in serving community and country, stating that national service can and should become a common expectation and opportunity for all Americans to strengthen our social fabric and solve our most pressing national challenges. The Franklin Project engages outstanding Americans from the private sector, higher education, government, the military, faith community, philanthropy, and nonprofit organizations, to develop innovative policy and to build momentum around advancing a new vision of civilian service for the 21st century. - See more at: http://www.aspeninstitute.org/policy-work/franklin-project#sthash.XorHOdcT.dpuf

Campus Compact and NSSE

The following is an update on a relationship between Campus Compact and the National Survey of Student Engagement.

The Compact is contracting with NSSE to pull out the data from the 2011-2012 service-learning module for Compact members and compare it with the overall group that participated in that optional module. NSSE expects to be done with this by the end of August. Depending on what the data shows, we will decide then how to proceed (write a brief report, share only internally etc.).

We would also like to go forward with “floating the idea” among schools about starting a consortium around civic engagement and service-learning. Although schools must sign up to participate in NSSE by September 24th, they do not choose to join a consortium until October. It would be good to let people know about it in September and October so they would be enticed to first participate in NSSE and then to consider joining the consortium. Then we would decide what questions from existing modules would be used.

We know that there are a number of other ideas generated by you including the opportunity for NSSE and the Compact to collaborate on a Webinar and the development of suggested approaches to help Compact members access their service-learning and civic engagement results.
