2009-10 Highlights . . . Engagement Across North Carolina

- 225 individuals were “adopted,” $3,868 was raised, and $757, in-kind donations were received through the Duke Center for Civic Engagement–Durham Programs partnership with Durham Department of Social Services. Low-income families in Durham County benefit from Project Share, an annual holiday giving program.
- UNC Pembroke launched Youth Summer Civic Engagement Institute for middle and high school students. Living and learning with college mentors for a week, students take fun, experiential learning courses and engage in service.
- Barton College mobilized 900+ volunteers on their first MLK Day of Service. This “day on,” built on a very successful day of service held in remembrance of 9/11.
- Elon University’s Kernodle Center for Service Learning began a bus route into downtown Burlington for spring semester. Students and community members could easily access many community service agencies.
- In 2008, Appalachian State University hosted the 10th largest blood-drive in the nation collecting more than 1,000 pints of blood for the American Red Cross. In 2009, through the third annual Homecoming blood drive, they once again met the goal of 1,000 pints donated by students, faculty, and staff.
- East Carolina University became the first college in the UNC system to open a Campus Kitchen, a project that will bring student-powered hunger relief to Pitt County. They join fellow NC campus, Wake Forest University, that opened their Campus Kitchen in 2007.
- D.I. von Briesen, a professor at Central Piedmont Community College, received the Applied Research Fellows Award for his work and development of the The EcoBox, a sustainable, off-the-grid, affordable housing unit created from abandoned shipping crates and donated building supplies.
- Dr. Deborah Bailey, director of the Academic Community Service Learning Program at NC Central University, shares that service learning allows students to develop effective civic responsibility. Last year, more than 5,000 NCCU undergraduates completed 140,000 hours of community service at 100 organizations.

Top photo: Duke staff and Durham residents at Project Share Middle photo: East Carolina student sanitizes thermometers for cooking shift at ECU’s Campus Kitchen
Bottom photo: Appalachian State student donates blood for 1,000 pint homecoming blood drive

For information about joining NC Campus Compact, go to: https://org.elon.edu/nccce/members/becomingAM.html

Making a Difference . . .

“When I first started volunteering at ASU, I could not have anticipated how much it would change me, how much I would grow, how many incredible friends I would make, and how my life would be altered. An Appalachian University senior reflected on her years of service in the Boone community that prepared her for her first international alternative break trip. Helping Panamanians build a rice field that would provide needed food, and working alongside community members to sort horse manure, an essential ingredient in furthering local coffee bean growth, she knew she had come along way. “I’ve learned what it means to give of your entire self—to love what you do, to appreciate what you have, to cherish every experience and every moment, and to work for something bigger than yourself.”

Community engagement is well-integrated into the NC college experience. There is co-curricular volunteering, service that is integrated into the curriculum, research that serves the community, and opportunities to practice philanthropy and social entrepreneurship. While students have classroom theory reinforced, they are also learning bigger lessons that will see them committed to their communities lifelong.

NC Campus Compact serves as a resource and convener for campuses committed to graduating civically-minded citizens and to building their communities. Campuses join the Compact to build collaborations with like-minded institutions, to better meet the needs of their region. The many students, staff and faculty that comprise the Compact tell moving stories about their contributions, and how they are learning through community interaction.

Higher education institutions are bracing for smaller budgets, and difficult decisions about what to cut. While confronting challenging times, our state’s community colleges, independent colleges and UNC institutions continue to greatly impact their communities. Investing in higher education is investing in our communities.

- Lisa Keyne, NC Campus Compact Executive Director

National Recognition for North Carolina Campuses Engaged in their Communities

Forty North Carolina higher education institutions were named to the President’s Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll for 2009 efforts. The Honor Roll was established in 2006 to recognize colleges and universities nationwide that support innovative and effective community service. The selection process is managed by the Corporation for National and Community Service, the federal agency that engages more than a million Americans in service through its Senior Corps, AmeriCorps, and Learn and Serve America programs, and leads President Obama’s national call to service initiative, United We Serve.

“Our nation’s students are a critical part of the equation and vital to our efforts to tackle the most persistent challenges we face. They have achieved impactful results and demonstrated the value of putting knowledge into practice to help renew America through service,” said Patrick Corvington, the CEO of the CNCS. “Congratulations to the awardees and students for their dedication to service and commitment to improving their local communities.

North Carolina has had an institution identified as “Presidential Award” each year since it was created. Elon University in 2006, Johnson C. Smith University in 2007, Duke University in 2008, and UNC Chapel Hill in 2009. Carolina students contributed more than 1 million hours of service through meal packaging events; had over 1,800 students involved with the UNC Dance Marathon, raising more than $390,000 to benefit N.C. Children’s hospital; and saw students involved with more than 150 community partners.

In addition to UNC Chapel Hill, the 2009 Honor Roll included:

Honor Roll with Distinction: Elon University, Lees-McRae College, UNC Charlotte, Western Carolina University Honor Roll: Brevard College, Cabarrus College of Health Sciences, Campbell University, Catawba College, Central Piedmont Community College, Davidson College, Duke University, East Carolina University, Elizabeth City State University, Fayetteville State University, Gardner-Webb University, Gaston College, Greensboro College, Guilford College, Halifax Community College, Johnson & Wales University-Charlotte, Johnson C. Smith University, Lanier-Rhyne University, Mars Hill College, Meredith College, Mid-Atlantic Christian University, Mount Olive College, NC Central University, NC State University, Pfeiffer University, Queens University of Charlotte, Saint Augustine’s College, Shaw University, St. Augustine’s College, UNC Asheville, UNC Wilmington, Wake Forest University, Western Piedmont Community College, Wingate University, Winston-Salem State University

Honor Roll with Distinction: Elon University, Lees-McRae College, UNC Charlotte, Western Carolina University

Honor Roll: Brevard College, Cabarrus College of Health Sciences, Campbell University, Catawba College, Central Piedmont Community College, Davidson College, Duke University, East Carolina University, Elizabeth City State University, Fayetteville State University, Gardner-Webb University, Gaston College, Greensboro College, Guilford College, Halifax Community College, Johnson & Wales University-Charlotte, Johnson C. Smith University, Lanier-Rhyne University, Mars Hill College, Meredith College, Mid-Atlantic Christian University, Mount Olive College, NC Central University, NC State University, Pfeiffer University, Queens University of Charlotte, Saint Augustine’s College, Shaw University, St. Augustine’s College, UNC Asheville, UNC Wilmington, Wake Forest University, Western Piedmont Community College, Wingate University, Winston-Salem State University

Honor Roll: Brevard College, Cabarrus College of Health Sciences, Campbell University, Catawba College, Central Piedmont Community College, Davidson College, Duke University, East Carolina University, Elizabeth City State University, Fayetteville State University, Gardner-Webb University, Gaston College, Greensboro College, Guilford College, Halifax Community College, Johnson & Wales University-Charlotte, Johnson C. Smith University, Lanier-Rhyne University, Mars Hill College, Meredith College, Mid-Atlantic Christian University, Mount Olive College, NC Central University, NC State University, Pfeiffer University, Queens University of Charlotte, Saint Augustine’s College, Shaw University, St. Augustine’s College, UNC Asheville, UNC Wilmington, Wake Forest University, Western Piedmont Community College, Wingate University, Winston-Salem State University
NC Campus Compact to Host Nationally-funded Student Service-Leadership Conferences in 2010

The national office of Campus Compact and The Jenzabar Foundation recently announced the awarding of three grants that will create "Best in Class" Student Service Leadership Conferences promoting civic engagement and in- spiring future generations to make a difference. With the grant they received, North Carolina Campus Compact will host two conferences reaching students in North Carolina, Virginia, and South Carolina. Conferences will be held October 29 at NC Wesleyan College in Rocky Mount, and November at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte.

"We applaud the creativity of our grant recipients who designed programs that reach broadly across states and demographics, and we look forward to exciting outcomes from each conference," said Campus Compact President Maureen Curley. Other grants support a collaborative of New England Campus Comapcts and Minnesota Campus Compact.

Camps Compact is a national coalition of more than 1,200 college and university presidents, representing some 6 million students, dedicated to pro- moting community service, civic engagement, and service-learning in higher education. As a public charity, The Jenzabar Foundation funds the good works and humanitarian efforts of their colleges and universities across the global community. Through their partnership, they are helping students in- volved in service reach their highest potential, while making the greatest im- pact on beneficiaries during their collegiate experience.

Since 1992, North Carolina college students have gathered yearly to net- work and grow in understanding the contributions they can make in their communities. High- lights of the daylong conferences have been student-led workshops, awarding a Community Impact Student Award to a student from each member campus, a hands-on service event and, most valued, net- working with civic-minded students from across the state. The grant allows for innovation that will expand service to local agencies, build greater student connections, and increase the grant presentation process. A 20-person Student Advisory Board will help plan the 2010 conferences.

MLK Grants Mobilize Over 19,500 Volunteers

Since 1992, North Carolina Campus Compact and The Jenzabar Foundation have awarded MLK grants to 33 institutions in 32 states and jurisdictions across the U.S. for the American Campus Corporation for National and Community Service, NC Campus Compact helped facilitate campus volunteerism through mini-grants.

Volunteers served meals, tutored youth, and built homes in 22 states. Over 1,200 students served home- less individuals, and 2010 Summer Associates received a small stipend through the Corporation for National and Community Service for their service. Campuses recruited fresh graduates to lead college- dom projects that will result in an estimated 16,000 new volunteers.

Summer Associates Promote Student Success

NC Campus Compact placed 16 AmeriCorps*VISTA summer associates on campuses in Alamance, Forsyth, Guilford, Mecklenburg, Nash and Pitt counties. 2010 Sum- mer Associates follow 12 who served in 2009. Summer Associates, who will work primarily with programs that help incoming first gen- eration college students, participate in a small stipend through the Corporation for National and Community Service for their service. Campuses recruited fresh graduates to lead college-dom projects that will result in an estimated 16,000 new volunteers.

Other work will be with programs that help first generation high school students, or in- ter to college or develop skills of d i s a d v a n t a g e d youth. They will build partnerships with local community service agencies. Summer Associates participate in an eight-week train- ing program that builds on their first year of success in college, and helps them develop skills for their volunteer assignments and to enter the workforce after college.
NC Campus Compact to Host Nationally-funded Student Service-Leadership Conferences in 2010

The national office of Campus Compact and The Jenzabar Foundation recently announced the awarding of three grants that will create “Best in Class” Student Service Leadership Conferences promoting civic engagement and in- spiring future generations to make a difference. With the grant they received, North Carolina Campus Compact will host two conferences reaching students in North Carolina, Virginia, and South Carolina. Conferences will be October 30 at NC Wesleyan College in Rocky Mount, and November at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte.

“We applaud the creativity of our grant recipients who designed programs that reach broadly across states and demographics, and we look forward to excelling outcomes from each conference,” said Campus Compact President Maureen Curley. Other grantors are a collaborative of New England Campus Compacts and Minnesota Campus Compact.

Campus Compact is a national coalition of more than 1,200 college and university presidents, representing some 6 million students, dedicated to promoting community service, civic engagement, and service-learning in higher education. As a public charity, The Jenzabar Foundation funds the good works and humanitarian efforts of the many campus leaders across the nation and the global community. Through their partnership, they are helping students involved in service reach their highest potential, while making the greatest impact on beneficiaries during their collegiate experience.

Since 1992, North Carolina college students have gathered yearly to network and grow in understanding the contributions they can make in their communities. Highlights of the daylong conferences have been student-led workshops, awarding a Community Impact Student Award to a student that represents the best from each member campus, a hands-on service event, and, most valued, networking with civically engaged students from across the state. The grant allows for innovation that will expand service to local agencies, build greater student connections, and increase student presentation opportunities. A 20-person Student Advisory Board will help plan the 2010 conferences.

THE CHALLENGE: By the year 2020, America will have the highest proportion of students graduating from college in the world. If we are not bold enough to educate a million students in Washington, D.C., will host up to 150 college and university presidential members of the American Council on Education to directly respond to President Obama’s Challenge. Funded in part by Lumina Foundation for Education, this is a unique opportunity to bring institutions together in a commitment to civic engagement.

Keynote speakers, discussions around compelling data, listening sessions, peer-to-peer conversations, and case examples will highlight the positive impact civic engagement has on college access and success.

For more information, or to register for this event, visit www.compact.org.
2009-10 Highlights . . . Engagement Across North Carolina

- 925 individuals were “adopted,” $9,868 was raised, and 875 in-kind donations were received through the Duke Center for Civic Engagement – Durham Programs partnership with Durham Department of Social Services. Low-income families in Durham County benefit from Project Share, an annual holiday giving program.

- UNC Pembroke launched Youth Summer Civic Engagement Institute for middle and high school students. Living and learning with college mentors for a week, students take on, with experiential learning courses and engage in service.

- Barton College mobilized 900+ volunteers on their first MLK Day of Service. This “day on,” built on a very successful day of service held in remembrance of 9/11.

- Elon University’s Kernodle Center for Service Learning began a bus route into downtown Burlington for spring semester. Students and community members could easily access many community service agencies.

- In 2008, Appalachian State University hosted the top 10th largest blood-drive in the nation collecting more than 1,000 pints of blood for the American Red Cross. In 2009, through the third annual Homecoming blood drive, they once again met the goal of 1,000 pints donated by students, faculty, and staff.

- East Carolina University became the first college in the UNC system to open a Campus Kitchen, a project that will bring student-powered hunger relief to Pitt County. They join fellow NC campuses, Wake Forest University, that opened their Campus Kitchen in 2007.

- D.I. von Briesen, a professor at Central Piedmont Community College, received the Applied Research Fellows Award for his work and development of the The EcoBox, a sustainable, off-the-grid, affordable housing unit created from abandoned shipping crates and donated building supplies.

- Dr. Deborah Bailey, director of the Academic Community Service Learning Program at NC Central University, shares that service learning allows students to develop effective civic responsibility. Last year, more than 5,000 NCCU undergraduates completed 140,000 hours of community service at 100 organizations.

For information about joining NC Campus Compact, go to: https://org.elon.edu/nccce/members/becomingAM.html

Top photo: Duke staff and Durham residents at Project Share Middle photo: East Carolina student sanitizes thermometers for cooking shift at ECU’s Campus Kitchen
Bottom photo: Appalachian State student donates blood for 1,000 pint homecoming blood drive

Making a Difference . . .

“When I first started volunteering at ASU, I could not have anticipated how much it would change me, how much I would grow, how many incredible people I would make, and how my life would forever be altered.” An Appalachian University senior reflected on her years of service in the Boone community that prepared her for her first international alternative break trip. Helping Panamanians build a rice field that would provide needed food, and working alongside community members to sort horse manure, an essential ingredient in furthering local coffee bean growth, she knew she had come a long way. “I’ve learned what it means to give of your entire self—to love what you do, to appreciate what you have, to cherish every experience and every moment, and to work for something bigger than yourself.” Community engagement is well-integrated into the NC college experience. There is a co-curricular volunteer, service that is integrated into the curriculum, research that serves the community, and opportunities to practice philanthropy and social entrepreneurship. While students have classroom theory reinforced, they are also learning bigger lessons that will see them committed to their communities lifelong.

NC Campus Compact serves as a resource and convener for campuses committed to graduating civically-minded citizens and to building their communities. Campuses join the Compact to build collaborations with like-minded institutions, to better meet the needs of their region. The many students, staff and faculty that comprise the Compact tell moving stories about their contributions, and how they are learning through community interaction. Higher education institutions are bracing for smaller budgets, and difficult decisions about what to cut. While confronting challenging times, our state’s community colleges, independent colleges and UNC institutions continue to greatly impact their communities. Investing in higher education is investing in our communities.

- Lisa Kyme, NC Campus Compact Executive Director

National Recognition for North Carolina Campuses Engaged in their Communities

Forty North Carolina higher education institutions were named to the President’s Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll for 2009 efforts. The Honor Roll was established in 2006 to recognize colleges and universities nationwide that support innovative and effective community service. The selection process is managed by the Corporation for National and Community Service, the federal agency that engages more than a million Americans in service through its Senior Corps, AmeriCorps, and Learn and Serve America programs, and the President Obama’s national call to service initiative, United We Serve.

“The nation’s students are a critical part of the equation and vital to our efforts to tackle the most persistent challenges we face. They have achieved impactful results and demonstrated the value of putting knowledge into practice to help renew America through service,” said Patrick Corvington, the CEO of the CNCS. “Congratulations to the awardees and students for their dedication to service and commitment to improving their local communities.”

North Carolina has had an institution identified as “Presidential Awardee” each year since it was created: Elon University in 2006, Johnson C. Smith University in 2007, Duke University in 2008, and UNC Chapel Hill in 2009. Carolina students contributed more than 1 million hours of service through meal packaging events; had over 1,800 students involved with the UNC Dance Marathon, raising more than $390,000 to benefit N.C. Children’s hospital; and saw students involved with more than 150 community partners.

In addition to UNC Chapel Hill, the 2009 Honor Roll included:

- Honor Roll with Distinction: Elon University, Leno-McRae College, UNC-Chapel Hill, Western Carolina University

- Honor Roll: Brevard College, Cabarrus College of Health Sciences, Campbell University, Catawba College, Central Piedmont Community College, Davidson College, Duke University, East Carolina University, Elizabeth City State University, Fayetteville State University, Gardner-Webb University, Gaston College, Greensboro College, Guilford College, Halifax Community College, Johnson & Wales University-Charlotte, Johnson & Wales University-Raleigh, Johnson & Wales University, Mars Hill College, Meredith College, Mid-Atlantic Christian University, Mount Olive College, NC Central University, NC State University, Pfeiffer University, Queens University of Charlotte, St. Augustine’s College, Shaw University, Starmount Community College, UNC Greensboro, UNC Wilmington, Wake Forest University, Western Piedmont Community College, Wingate University, Winston-Salem State University